RESPONSIBILITY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

Amp the complexities of modern life in regard to their duties and responsibilties to their follows. An philosophy is too generally adopted, whereby many of us are able to salve our consciences by quoting 'am I my brother's keeper,' and passing by, so to speak, on the other side. It should b remembered, however, that we are then quoting the cynical interrogation of man with whom we would hardly care to associate should be be permitted to revisit this mundane sphere in the flesh for a second time. Although we may for a shorter or longer period quieten the conscience which we are told bakes cowards of us all by taking mental seperifics, we cannot maintain the laissez faire attitude all the time. Some juxtaposition of events will cause us inward questionings, and we will find that when we each regard our bare soul stripped of all its specious trappings, it is not such a beautiful spectacle that we should wax unduly proud of it. Too often, through fear of seeming demonstrative, through terror lest the world should misunderstand our motives and ridicule our endeavours, we turn our blind eve to our duty to a feebler fellow creature. We have all done it at some time or another and probably we will do it again as the flesh is weak, but in the silent spaces of the night when the glitter and glare of our sensitive social lives is veiled for a period the reproaches of memory will whisper in a voice that penetrates our ismost being that we have left un done-those things which we ought to have done, bowever scrupulously have refrained fromdoing those we ought not to do. After all it is really so easy to do right that the only marvel is that men do evil, but we all work ill through callousness or thoughtlessness. And the latter is perhaps a greater cause of moral crime, if we may so express it than most people imagine. Whitties said 'Evil is wrought by want of thought as much as want of heart,' and he was not so far wrong. The world would be a better place to live in if we commenced to think that in a degree we were each our brother's keeper, and probably the first man who started live according to those lights would be surprised to find instead of being greet-

There's to be no mixed bathing i Cork. The Irish characteristic healthy attitude towards the question of the relationship of the sexes seems to have suffered from a cold or something, if the conduct of the Cork Corporation is to be taken as any criterion. Having had their attention drawn to the fact that in a proposed swimming competition in the City male and female competitors would be in the water at the same time, they received a spasm of horror that men have but little time for thought affected them in a manner hardly to be credited possible in anyone outside the ranks of the Shrieking Sisterbood. As a male Mrs Grandy they surpassed themselves. The Chairman in hi Grandy bonnet and glasses and shocked expression denounced the promoters as men devoid of any sense of decency, and with the declaration that we are not he issued an edict that the wan and the swimming competition were to be suppressed with the utmost rigour of the law. Innocent amusement goes down before the prudish notions of a number of old women in men's attire, picture the rear of Stonecutter's Island signature; the husband cannot get silly prudishness and puerile Pecksniffs gotten gains into something tangible professing high moral outlook; but what would we do in the summer if the Cork Corporation suddenly swooped down upon us with their out-of-date and narrow-gauge actions of propriety

Rum and religion do not blend well together, according to an experiment tried recently in New York. The idea emanated from Bishop Potter and was to run a subway tovern under teligious management, where a glass of strong liquor could be obtained without the consumer being subjected to the usual contaminating influences. A year ago palace at Peking. the tayern was opened with prayer and hymns but now it has ceased to exist as a religious institution and will bence forth be run as an ordinary grogehop. Some of the New York papers bitterly denounce the Bishop for making the experiment, while others declare that most people interested in the temperance question will read with regret of the failure of this novel sociological experiment. The reasons given by the proprietor for the tavern's failure are interesting. He mys, in venting his indignation at the regulations which forbid him to cater to the low elements of society, 'It was impossible to follow God and chase the devil. He lost because he was forbilden to sell drinks to any one who had liquored up to the point of becoming generous and proed by contumely and contempt, that the fitable. Without attempting to discuss here the pros and cons of coolie emigration to the South African mines, a trip or two into the country around and behind Wuchow will suggest reasons why the mon who went from this part of China were comparatively few. Large tracts of land are lying idle all round, land that appears to be well worth cultivation. It would seem if these tracts the parts which have been brought under cultivation. In a word the labourers are altogether inadequate in numbers to bring all the possible land under cultivation. There are not hands enough both to dig the soil and to irrigate the fields when once they have been planted. The officials did not relish the idea that their province would be further impoverished by the exportation of their able-bodied men, and most thoughtful people will agree that there is much to be said for this attitude, 'Consequently, apart from other reasons, there was never any serious exodus from Kwangsai, and when there were sinister rumons, floating about the emigration ceased altogether. THE CORINTHIAN FACHT CLUB. The first Ulub race for the One-design class of the Corinthian Xacht Club for the 1905-6 season took place yesterday. The course was from the Police Pier, Kowloon, to Lycemun Beacon, thence to Kowloon Rock, across to Moyer' East buoy and then "Asthore," "Gsel," "Thecla," "Hibernia," and "Cam." The latter host crossed the line about jour minutes after "Nina," but owing to the light wind and strong tide the leading boats fell considerably, "Nins" even going back Boross the line. Besting up towards Blackhead's point by a series of short tacks, the loading boats "Nina," "Gael, "Thecla," and " Asthore" were very close together, but as the "Nina" managed to just clear the point while the other boats were forced to go about she gained a good lead and set soross towards the dock on the starboard tack. "Hibernia" and "Cam" were then a good deal in the rear, but the former was gradually improving her position, while "Cam" decided to cross the harbour, a move which proved Hastrous. Kowloon Rock were :-Hibernia"...... "Thenla" 'Nina" "Asthoro" "Cam" did not round until some after " Asthore."

Reaching across to Meyer's East Buoy "Gael" kept considerably to windward, but "Hibernia" ran free and rounded first, one minute fifty seconds ahead of "Gael" 'Thecla" being one minute 20 seconds further away. "Hibernia" maintained her lead on the run home and won comfortably, after sailing an excellent race.

There-will be no need in future to go Morocco, says the Chronide. It can found in Spitalfields-in the very heart one of London's darkest slums, when nothing less than a Moorish market burst into life recently with clamour and flare and genuine excitement that no one who was there is likely ever to forget.

'MOORISH MARKET.

Palace of Shops to Replace

Petticoat Lane.

To those who do not know Spitalfields, the fact that theway to the Moorish marks lies by Fashion-street might be misleading Fashion-street represents the grimmes irony upon a name that is to be found in

All around huge, towering blocks of 'model' dwellings shut out the sky. 9 elther side, save for an old-mg warehouse, are grimy, tumbledown cottages, will grubby children on the doontop, and little shops—one of them a money lender's—and lodging-houses, where faded notices Yiddish are stuck on the windows. Such a Fashion-street

It is in the very midst of this dilapidated wrought one of the most re arkable and painful in passing: frequently, too, changes that the East-end has known Here, on the site of a whole plump of con demned courts and alleys, has been raised what looks at first sight 11th an East-end version of Earl's Court.

Covering an acre and a half, and built substantially of white stone and red brick in a style that is, considering the district quite amazing. Along the front are Moorish arches roughly but picturesquely traced.

somer still. Beneath a high glass roof are going completely round, reached by a fine imiginable, with little safes and counters

This, then, is the Moorish market—as was until last night. It has been built b a local builder, Mr A. Davis, with a view to giving the horder of Jews and other aliens replace the undersirable and insanitary rows of street-stalls that have made Pettlfamous and infamous.

every possible courtesy from the local don, England, post free on receipt of price. authorities, but neither they nor he can have been seized upon by the population of Spitalfields as it was yesterday.

Long before the builders had finished even the part of the market that was intended to be opened, every stall had been taken, and could, indeed, have let three four times over

B. Gud to ... in In less than an hour in some instances the wares were set out-wares of every onesivable kind, alive and dead.

Below were the butchers, the green-Above were the fancy goods, and th of colour, of yallow and staring blues.

The score, however, was not complete HOTEL. until the local public itself had burst ! Then, indeed, the Moorish market became as suggestively Oriental as anything to be found in London. The crowd was stifling; the noise was deafoning. The people took to the place as if it were home. Over the bridges, round the balconies, through the arcades, a jestling, motley throng of Jew and swarthy Gentile paraded and wrangled and abouted. The old bewigged Jewesses in aboir ad shawl had of course taken early possession; but in the Moorish market yesterday oven the smartest young Rachels and Estherin Spitalfields started precedent by arriving bare-headed to buy their parti-coloured apparel, As for the children, they swarmed everywhere, rushing wildly hither and thither, hanging upon banisters, and tumbling down the crowded stairs, half-mad with delight of emerging from the gloomy street into this comparatively glorious fairyland. Altogother, what with a band-two fiddles and a cornet—which discounsed music from a balcony, and the shouts of the calesmen, and the crowing of cocke and the quacking of ducks, and the babble of alien tongues, and the kaleidoscopio variety can be better imagined than described, As one of the sights of London, Pettisoatlane will hardly, surviye for long in comparison with the Moorish market. It is not, however, by any means only as a sight that the Moorish market is likely to prove valuable. It is an experiment in giving the enormous model-dwelling population a bright, siry, prettily and substantially built place of merchandise at their very doors. In the immediate neighbourhood of the Moorish market is model-dwelling population of something like 15,000. The idea has been that these should have their neighbouring stores, in Ide Departments are free from liability in the same way as the West end flat.

> Daily Chronicle representative why 162 every district with a large number of model

dwellidge should not have its "poor man's Harrod's," As it is, there is only the street; market-and that is in some places throatened.

It may be mentioned that buildes the benefit of being able to buy and sell under cover and amid bright and inspiring aurroundings the Mogrish market affords special clean places with troughs for the killing of fowls, the cutting of fish, and so

One may add also that there seems every prospect of these markets proving to be a case of lucrative philanthropy, They have cost altogether 270,000, and the 300 stalls are each let at 10s. 6d. a week, A very fair perentage seems to result, from a rough calculation.
